KASHMIR: The 'Wounded Civilisation' Strikes Back OP/ED

By Gwynne Dyer • Originally published August 7th, 2019

God knows what novelist V.S. Naipaul really meant Half a century ago when he called India 'the wounded civilisation' in his travelogue-cum-psycho-analysis book about the home of his ancestors. But it is a handy phrase, because it encapsulates the vision that drove Prime Minister Narendra Modi to destroy the deal that bound Kashmir to India on Monday.

There is going to be a war over this. Certainly another war in Kashmir, where tens of thousands of people were killed in the last uprising against Indian rule (1989-2007). Maybe also another war between India and Pakistan. There have been three already, of course, so maybe that's not such a big deal – but this would be their first war since they both got nuclear weapons.

When Britain gave up its Indian empire in 1947 the general rule was that Muslim-majority areas went to Pakistan, Hindu-majority areas to India. Kashmir was tricky, however, because it was a 'princely state' with a Muslim majority but a Hindu ruler – and in the princely states, which were never under direct British rule, it was the prince who decided.

The Maharajah of Jammu and Kashmir (to give the state its full name) hesitated for a while, hoping to turn it into his own independent country. When the new government of Pakistan lost patience and sent 'tribesmen' into Kashmir to overthrow him, he quickly opted for India instead – and set in motion a conflict that is still going 72 years later.

India should probably have cut a deal with Pakistan that divided the state, giving Kashmir (current population 7 million, almost all Muslims) to Pakistan and keeping Jammu (current pop. 5 million, two-thirds Hindu) for itself. Instead, it tried to keep it all – and wound up in a war with Pakistan.

At the end of that war, India still held the densely populated Vale of Kashmir and Jammu, but Pakistan controlled the northern and western parts of the former princely state. The 'Line of Control' has not shifted since, despite two further Indo-Pakistani wars, and there is no mutually agreed border. Bill Clinton once called the cease-fire line "the most dangerous place in the world."

The Congress Party that led India to independence was militantly secular, but it realised that the country's only Muslim-majority state must have a special status. Jammu and Kashmir accepted India's control over foreign affairs, defence and communications, but the J&K legislature kept its authority over everything else.

That included laws forbidding people not born in Jammu and Kashmir to settle in the state or own property there. Fair enough, as the relatively poor Muslim majority in the state feared being bought out or overwhelmed by Hindu incomers from the rest of India, which is 80% Hindu and now one-and-a-third billion strong.

COMMUNITY BUILDING WORKSHOP

INFO

By Oriana Raven

Elements of Community Building Weekend Workshop

6:30pm Friday, Sept 6 – 4:00pm Sunday Sept 8

Denman United Church

Everyday we move in and out of diverse communities: neighborhoods, workplaces, spiritual communities, families, art spaces, interest groups and more. At times we feel connected, supported and valued; at other times we feel frustrated, disempowered, isolated or burnt out. When community interactions cause us to leave our circles of connection or to step out of service to our community, then the whole community is diminished.

Is another way possible? Can we learn to stay engaged through times of difficulty and build resilient structures for leadership, for shared restorative practices, for reenergizing our activism and community-work?

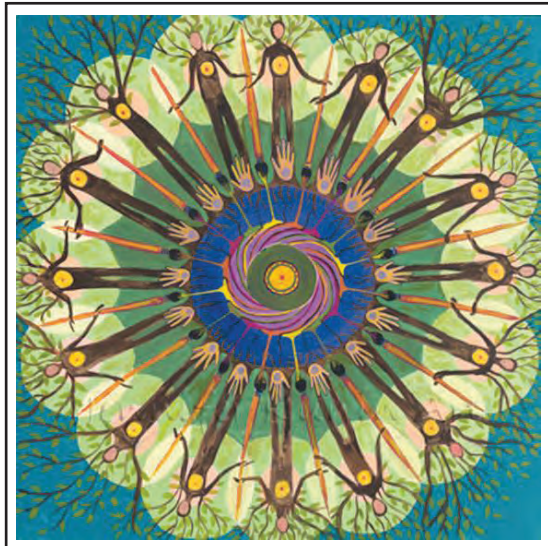

This hands-on community-building workshop is open to all people. You will learn tools, skills and energetic techniques that will dovetail with your community building skills. We will practice personal and group energetic awareness to become more effective in building the communities and cultures that can heal the wounds of the earth and her peoples, and nurture future generations.

We will explore inter-faith alliance building; models of power that define decision-making and leadership; communication and relationship skills such as energetic awareness, inclusion, accountability and trust; and tools for community sustainability.

This Elements of Community Building is a core Reclaiming Tradition* class, taught by Willow Kelly and Oriana Raven. The values of the Reclaiming Tradition stem from the understanding that the earth and all of life is sacred and interconnected. We share a deep, spiritual commitment to the earth, to healing, and to the linking of magic with political action. We work for all forms of justice: environmental, social, political, racial, gender and economic. * www.reclaiming.org

Workshop fees are on a sliding scale $95 – $195. To register for the Elements of Community Building and for more info contact Wendy Pope: wendypope@uni-serve.com (250) 335 – 0964.

Various Indian central governments nibbled away at Jammu and Kashmir's autonomy over the years, and there were periods of armed protest against the erosion of its status. But the state remained legally autonomous, its rights entrenched in the Indian constitution – until last Monday. Then Narendra Modi's sectarian Hindu government, fresh from its landslide May election victory, swept them all away.

Modi obviously knows he's asking for trouble. Ten thousand more Indian troops were moved into Kashmir (where there is already a huge military presence) in the past week. On Monday phone lines in Kashmir were cut, the internet was shut down, and elected Kashmiri leaders were arrested. New Delhi expects at least another uprising in Kashmir, and maybe another war with Pakistan. Why is Modi doing this?

Because the notion of the 'wounded civilisation' is at the heart of the Hindu nationalism that has brought Modi to power. According to this simplistic narrative, all of India's past misfortunes and current problems are due to the fact that the Indian subcontinent ('South Asia') was conquered and ruled by foreigners for most of the past thousand years.

For the most recent couple of centuries it was the British empire, but at least the British went home again. For many centuries before that it was Muslims – foreign invaders at first, and then their Indian-born Muslim descendants and converts – who ruled most of the subcontinent. And they never went home: one-third of South Asia's population, including 15% of India's, is Muslim today.

THE SATURDAY MARKET • The DI Tea Company & Cable Ferry Plastic COMM INFO By Kerri Boland

Michael Rapati decided recently that enough plastic from the cable ferry had been found on the beach and someone should start collecting it, so that's what he's doing at the Saturday market. He would love for islanders to get out walk those beaches, looking for blue and yellow shreds of any size where the seaweed tends to wash up, as that's where the plastic is most often found. Michael is also documenting where the plastic is found, and is communicating all of this information to BC Ferries. So far, they have been willing to take the plastic off his hands, but have said nothing about their own clean up efforts, or a change in design. The plastic has been found on many of the beaches on Denman, and several on Hornby, including at Helliwell. Eventually Michael hopes to turn the plastic into a sculpture. Let's help him collect as much of this plastic as possible and get it off our beaches.

Brendan, of the Denman Island Tea Company, is back at the market again this year with three different fresh brewed iced teas every week. Of the three varieties he brings, one will always be a classic black Ceylon tea, flavoured with fruit – he's used mango, lemon and peach recently. Another will be a fruit tisane, and his last variety at the market will most often be a rooibos – this week it was a blood orange flavor. Brendan has close to 5000 tea starts in his greenhouse on the island and is looking forward to when they're big enough to start harvesting from! 🍷

Every nationalist movement lays claim to victimhood, and for aggrieved Hindu nationalists a Muslim-majority Indian state with special rights is a permanent insult. Abolishing those rights was one of Modi's main election promises, and he is now delivering on it. Even if the heavens fall.

They probably won't. The Kashmiri insurgency will certainly reignite, and Pakistan will feel obliged to help the uprising in some way. Some thousands, or more likely some tens of thousands, will die, and Kashmir will be an occupied war zone for a long time to come, but India and Pakistan will probably manage to veer away from all-out war once again.

But maybe they won't, in which case we will all find out how well mutual nuclear deterrence works between two countries that are actually fighting a war.

FROM THE CROW'S NEST: Considering Atlantis By William Thomas

ARTS&LIT

How could I leave myself?

Good point. But Atlantis? Seriously? You think you were there at the end?

I have no recollection of it. Though my presence at that catastrophic come-uppance 1,600 years ago was confirmed by an authority disturbingly accurate in everything else she told me.

You're claiming Atlantis actually existed?

Perhaps under another name. As eroding bias sharpens our vision, we keep bumping into fragments of advanced civilizations. Read your Hancock. Consider how all indigenous cultures – including the Haida – describe the same Great Flood. This archetypal myth – retold on 146 million web pages – actually occurred. So why judge the second most persistent story across cultures, automatically false?

The Atlantis legend is best taken as parable.

It certainly looks like Atlantis all over again.

Plato's point.

Plato provided topographic detail.

He liked teaching through allegory.

He had corroboration.

TinTin and Disney came much later.

The description of a “big island in the Atlantic” comes from Herodotus, who relates how Phoenician ships dismasted off Africa’s west coast were swept westwards on Atlantic currents to an unsuspected continent. Unlike CNN and the New York Times, ancient Greek historians did not peddle make-believe as fact.

So just where was this Atlantis? We're told Thera's caldera marks the spot. No, the Azores. Antarctica, others insist. Or down by Bimini with Jimmy Buffet.

Herodotus was likely referencing the Americas, where a geologically-verified cometary impact erased an entire culture.

Woo-woo alert!

Woo-woo is the official 9/11 narrative and the nightly “news”. Check out Hancock’s extensively-annotated Before America. Also, Mundus Subterraneus. The Jesuit, Kircher’s 1665 map book includes an old Egyptian chart of “Atlantis”.

And those flying machines, Orville?

The construction and flight characteristics of the “boats of heaven” are taken verbatim from the Samar, Vaimanika Sastra and Samara Sutradhara sacred texts of ageless India – where aircraft commonly called Vimanas visited “Atlantis”.

How did those Vedic chroniclers ever imagine atomic detonations?

I took that description directly from the Mahabharata.

Past as prologue...

Time is not linear. Ask any indigenous or Medieval person. Or physicist. Everything makes an unbroken circle. “Past” and “future” are a streaming Mobius strip without borders or beginnings.

Don't you own a watch?

More consensual pretense.

Except when determining ferry times or your longitude at sea.

Touché.

And the rest?

Hepter sailed from Tyre. The harbor scene comes from my environmental emergency response work at Kuwait's war-wrecked al-Shuaiba Port during the oil fires. The sounds of pumice bumping the hull I remember from Ra-baul. The floating bodies we'll get to.

You're saying whenever the lessons of myth or history are inconvenient, we ignore them.

At our peril. Even as we mock eyewitness accounts of events that don't jibe with our own smug – and often-proved-wrong – assumptions. Look around! Reality has never been in such disfavor. Nor whimsy so prized. Though awash in information, never have so many known so little about so much. And preferred it that way.

So, you're transposing personal experiences with twice-told tales into your Atlantis yarn?

Just about.

Are the Atlantis musings on your web-site intended as metaphors? Fables? Fantasies?

Warnings.

OLD GROWTH ON THE INTERNET

OP/ED

By Eartha Muirhead

On August 8th, 26 years ago, I was arrested, at the Clayoquot protests, standing alongside our infamous late and great Ana Miriam. All told, 932 people were arrested, the largest act of civil disobedience seen in "Canada." This action did stop the logging in that area for about ten years but slowly corporate interests have snuck back in, sharing the bounty with some of the local First Nations.

So many Island ancient forests have been lost forever. Recently the Nahmint Valley has gone the way of the dinosaur and soon more of Cathedral Grove will be taken to the graveyards. The Schmidt Creek watershed has been hammered hard but logging was stopped for the summer. There is a petition you can sign that will remind the NDP that we are watching them and we disagree with their duplicity. Please go to WWW.CHANGE.ORG and look for the first petition listed named: " Add Schmidt Creek" and sign your name. May the remaining wild trees and animals have homes to safely live in. 🍷
